A balancing act

Living her dream of becoming an entrepreneur, Namrata Phatale has managed to strike the perfect balance between home and work

Reconciling and working on a flexible time schedule did wonders for Namrata Phatale's work-life balance. After working as a technical associate for a few years in Solapur and pursuing a Master's Degree, Phatale moved to Pune in 2008 for better career prospects. After earning a degree in VLSI and embedded systems, she started working on small projects as a freelancer and her career, as an entrepreneur, blossomed.

Today, Phatale is the co-director of Aller Technologies and Pvt Ltd. She has an impressive list of clients, who swear by her services—her service is her USP. "Today, there is a lot of competition in the market and you have to do everything you can to stand out. Our speciality lies in retaining a loyal customer base and we do this largely through our service. In addition to this, we have a huge and authentic database. We ensure that there is accountability for everything," Phatale explained.

A mother of two, she relies heavily on her team to share the load when she isn't around. Her mornings are usually occupied running errands and doing chores for the house after which she starts work. She takes a break in the evening to spend some time with her kids. She completes her work at night. "Running a business and handling a family might not always be easy, but it can be done. My one piece of advice to entrepreneurs is quite simple. You have to stay dedicated to your passion and be patient. At the same time, the support of your family is extremely valuable and so they should not be ignored either," Phatale said. This entrepreneur's pillar of support is her husband, who is a software engineer. He ensures he is honest with her about her work and that helps a lot.
